CCC CAMP FOR HEMPSTEAD

Here and There

Editorial By ALEX. H. WASHBURN

TODAY'S announcement by County Agent Frank Stanley of a CCC camp to be constructed on the Lewisville highway by the U. S. Soil Erosion Service is the fruit of several weeks of secret labor. Mr. Stanley discovered that the Soil Erosion Service wanted a project in this area; and he interested local citizens in the matter—culminating April 25 in a mass visit by Hempstead farmers to the great sample project in erosion control north of Conway, Ark.

Veto Certain for Patman Bonus Bill Says White House

Political Considerations Ignored—Showdown Scheduled Next Week

F. D. BACKS UP NRA Agrees With NRA Board to Demand Extension of Two Years

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—The White House announced definitely Thursday that President Roosevelt will veto the Patman bonus bill.

It was emphasized that it is the president's earnest hope that congress will support the veto.

This notice was given through Roosevelt's secretary, Stephen Early, in response to published statements that some administration leaders might like to see the veto overridden for political purposes.

Early said the president is not interested in the bonus because of political reasons.

Expressing confidence that they had gained up some votes, senate supporters of the Patman bonus bill decided Thursday to send it to the White House next week for Roosevelt's veto.

President Behind NRA

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—President Roosevelt and the NRA Board agreed Thursday on a revised NRA program calling for a two-year extension, as contrasted with the senate vote to continue the recovery organization until April 1st next year.

The program agreed on Thursday includes:

1. Three to six months to revise existing codes.
2. Jurisdiction limited to businesses engaged in interstate commerce.
3. Definite authority and standards to prevent unfair competition and practices.
4. Provisions to protect individual rights and enterprises through opportunity for hearings and judicial review.
5. Code-making methods and enforcement to be further defined.

Public Radio System

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—The Federal Communications Commission had before it Thursday a recommendation for establishment of a public radio broadcasting system to supplement but not supplant the present private systems.

The recommendation is the result of four years' investigation by the National Committee on Education by Radio.

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—A basic framework for labor's wages under the $4,000,000,000 work program, calling for a 50 per cent reduction in prevailing hourly rates on construction jobs, Wednesday night was disclosed to have been drawn tentatively for White House approval.

Emphasizing that President Roosevelt has yet to approve the set-up, a high official said monthly payments were expected to vary from $16 for

The federal work in Faulkner county made a profound impression upon our home people.

Occasional drought years, of increasing intensity, remind us that we have been wearing out agricultural America without doing much to rebuild her. Farms have been permitted to run down because always there was fresh land farther west—but not today.

Agriculture has probably gone farther west than is practicable, and it is likely that for general farming purposes there will be a rebound of population back upon areas like Arkansas. Our land may become more valuable as time goes on—and therefore we have an excellent practical reason for improving it today.

We saw two things on our Conway trip. We saw the most modern methods of preventing fields from washing, and of filling in gulches that had already washed; and we saw a tremendous earth dam constructed at the bottom of a valley in order to raise the level of sub-surface water over thousands of acres of land several miles removed from the actual dam-site.

X X X

The Hempstead county farmers who went on that trip April 25 were pretty well versed in the common methods of preventing the washing away of soil.

What struck most of them, however, was the practical value of such a large program applied to the soil of Hempstead county, which appears far superior to the stony hillsides we inspected in northern Faulkner.

"If it's worth-while up there it should make a million dollars back home," one farmer told me.

I suppose that's the net result of most trips—to make one glad to get home again.

X X X

The problem of sub-surface water is being studied closely in the Faulkner county work.

A dam is thrust across the foot of a valley, backing up a lake of perhaps 40 or 50 acres. In theory this dam, creating a pool of water at the foot of the drainage points where small creeks and valleys empty, should slow up the drainage process, sufficiently to raise the sub-surface water in thousands of acres of land lying far upstream from the dam.

The Soil Erosion Service is having the Faulkner county farmers keep detailed measurements on the water level of their wells.

This will tell the story in a few years.

In drought-subject areas it is possible to make sub-surface water carry on for a time in the absence of rain. It won't work for corn, which has shallow, fibrous roots; but it might work for cotton and other plants having a single powerful tap root that buries itself deep in the earth.

"Bank Night" at Theater Illegal

Cashing of Lucky-Number Tickets Is Lottery, Says Carl Bailey

LITTLE ROCK.—Attorney General Carl E. Bailey Wednesday said that a system of awarding a cash prize to the holder of a lucky number in connection with "bank night" at a theater, constitutes a lottery and that operators of such schemes may be prosecuted for misdemeanor and fined from $50 to $500 upon conviction.

The opinion was sent to Jack Owen, deputy prosecuting attorney at Nashville, Howard county, who asked if operation of a "bank night" by theaters was a violation of the law.

"We think it is clear that any person who sells a theater ticket in connection with a plan whereby the holder of a certain secret number will be given a certain sum of money is a lottery, as the holder of the lucky ticket is given a preference over all other persons purchasing tickets for the show," Guy E. Williams, assistant attorney general, wrote Mr. Owen.

Church Aims to Keep Wednesday Night Attendance Above 120

Wednesday night the First Methodist church quota of attendance set for the mid-week prayer services was exceeded. There were 124 persons present Wednesday night for the service and study in the Book of Acts and this despite inclement weather during the afternoon.

It is hoped that for the remaining two Wednesday nights of this revival the attendance will keep well above 120. The Fay Hannon family has been the largest family present for the first two Wednesday night services.

Next Wednesday the recently organized Young People's chorus will sing.

Firemen's Rodeo Planned July 3-4

Second Annual Rodeo and Free Barbecue Announced for Hope

Hope Fire Department's second annual rodeo and free barbecue will be held July 3 and 4, it was announced Friday by J. K. Sale, fire chief.

This year's show is expected to attract between 6,000 and 7,000 persons, Mr. Sale said. Last year a crowd estimated at between 4,000 and 5,000 attended.

Bids will be received on 2,500 pounds of dressed meat to be used for the barbecue.

Over 100 head of stock is expected to be used in staging the rodeo which will include steer roping, bullfighting, wild horse riding, calf tying, trick and fancy roping.

Mr. Sale said the rodeo would probably be held the night of July 3 with an all-day entertainment and free barbecue for the Fourth.

Tentative plans call for a parade through the downtown section on the morning of the Fourth.

Psychologist Gives 20 Rules for Making Success of Marriage

New crises confronting marriage today requires new thought in dealing with them. Mary Margaret McBride has interviewed a leading authority on present-day matrimonial problems in this, the first of six articles on "The Marriage Scene." Valuable advice to June brides and bridegrooms is offered herewith.

By MARY MARGARET MCBRIDE
NER Service Staff Correspondent
NEW YORK—Young people who want to get married and yet, because of the depression, have neither jobs nor money to set up housekeeping, should go right ahead, anyway, and let the state and their families take care of the cost of establishing homes and having babies.

That is the opinion of Dr. Arthur Frank Payne, psychologist, personnel director of City College and educational director of the Institute of Applied Psychology, who has come to the forefront among students of present-day marriage problems. Hundreds of young people have taken his advice and it has worked, he declares.

"Since nature makes young people capable of becoming fathers and mothers at about 14, society is doing them a grave injustice by not helping them to get married as early as possible," Dr. Payne asserts.

Marry at Right Time

"The state should subsidize child bearing. That is, young couples should be able to have babies at the expense of the state without cost to themselves. And if they have no money to support themselves, their parents should look after them until such time as they are able to set up and maintain separate homes."

The important thing, Dr. Payne believes, is that young people should marry at the right time. When they do not, all sorts of delicate and dangerous problems develop. In fact, Dr. Payne believes that a bachelor of 35 is worthless for marriage.

In spite of his feeling that everybody should marry early, Dr. Payne realizes that marriage is a precarious state. He has tabulated and analyzed exactly fifty-seven varieties of conditions that produce unhappiness. The first of these is difference in religious belief, causing conflict over the religious training of children.

Nagging, lack of romantic love, trying to keep up with the Joneses, interference by in-laws, quarrels over money, sulking, failure of husband to be a good provider and of wife to be a good housekeeper, bad table manners of husband, petty quarrels of wife with the neighbors and embarrassing behavior of either husband and wife in front of friends are some of the causes which may wreck honeymoon peace, the psychologist says.

Sets Forth 20 Rules

Sex difficulties account for fifteen of Dr. Payne's fifty-seven varieties of marital discord. A feeling of inferiority due to one's mate being better educated than one's self is dangerous.

Day, McKean to Be Given Over to U.S.

Day, Baptized at Death's Door, May Be Moved Regardless

IDABEL, Okla.—(AP)—Oklahoma authorities announced Thursday they would release Sam Day and Rube McKean, Arkansas convicts, to the federal government for prosecution in the $3,000 Idabel National Bank robbery.

Agent Brantley, chief of the Department of Justice agents of Oklahoma, said charges would be filed against the two at Muskogee after two of his agents had completed their investigation of the Idabel robbery.

Brantley said he is sending two men to Idabel for the prisoners, with the announcement that Day, not expected to recover from his shoulder wound, would be moved regardless, if possible.

Day Baptized

IDABEL, Okla.—(AP)—Sam Day, 23-year-old Arkansas life term, was baptized Wednesday as attendants told him he was not expected to survive gunshot wounds suffered in a gun battle with officers following the $3,000 holdup of the Idabel National Bank. Traumatic pneumonia followed hemorrhages caused by a shoulder wound Day suffered as local officers frustrated an attempt by the pair to escape after robbing the bank. Day, given life for slaying a Texarkana sheriff, and Rube McKean, serving a bank robbery term, had been at large since they escaped from Tucker prison farm in Arkansas, March 27.

Dr. R. D. Williams, president of the bank that Day and McKean robbed and who has been in constant attendance with two other physicians at the murderers' bedside, said Day had no chance to survive.

Day was told of his condition and at once asked for a minister, saying he wished to join a church. While his sister, Miss Anna Mae Day of Texarkana, sat beside him, Day was received into the Nazarene church by the Rev. Mr. Webb of that faith, assisted by the Rev. Bert Jones, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Idabel.

McKean pleaded not guilty at his first appearance in court but later told officers he had changed his mind and would plead guilty. He was taken back to the courtroom, but again

Lone Thug Hijacks Tol-E-Tex Station

Eva Downs Forced Away at Point of Gun—Robber Gets $25 and Gas

A lone highwayman held up the Tol-E-Tex Oil company station, East Third street, at midnight Wednesday night and escaped with approximately $25 in cash.

Eva Downs, station employee, said the robber drove into the station from the direction of Hope, ordered his car filled with gas and oil and drank a Coca Cola while the car was being served.

As the two stepped inside the station where Downs expected to be paid the robber whipped out a revolver and ordered Downs to "put up your hands."

The robber then walked over to the telephone, jerked the wires from the wall and rifled the cash register. After obtaining all the cash, the bandit marched Downs at the point of a pistol a few yards west of the station.

The highjacker ordered Downs to stay there "until I get away." The bandit turned, climbed into his car and headed west toward Hope.

Downs said the robber was about 6 feet in height, weighed about 160 pounds, and had previously visited the station, buying gas there Monday night.

Downs said the bandit was alone and escaped in a 1929 model Ford car.

Letter Operators Lose Court Round

Denied Injunction to Stop Arkansas Officers From Interfering

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—(AP)—Police announced Thursday the discovery of an alleged chain letter swindle calculated to net the operators from $5,000 to $10,000.

The police said the letters had been sent to at least 200 delegates of the Southern Baptist convention, which is in session here.

Arkansas Attacks Them

LITTLE ROCK.—(AP)—Official attack upon chain letter operators will move to a climax Thursday with developments on three fronts: In Municipal Court, in Chancery Court and in the United States district attorney's office.

Otho and Sam Ozmert of Fort Smith, arrested Wednesday on charges of violating state lottery laws through the operation of a chain letter service, will be given a hearing before Municipal Judge Harb. Their attorney, Sam Robinson, has announced he will seek a temporary injunction from Chancery Court restraining county and city officers from interfering with the operation of the letter service.

Robinson also said he will appeal to circuit court if his clients are convicted in municipal court.

Fred A. Isgrig, United States district attorney, said he plans to begin an investigation to determine whether such operations are in violation of the federal laws, irrespective of the use of the mails, which has been termed a lottery and a fraud.

Federal Service Will Put Land Reclamation Plans Into Effect

CAMP TO BE BUILT

Project Result of Farmer Excursion to Conway April 25

Location of a Civilian Conservation Corps camp, six miles south of Hope on the J. R. Henry road, was announced Thursday by Frank Stanley, Hempstead county farm agent.

The camp will be operated by the United States Soil Erosion Service.

The camp is to be set up and maintained as an effective farm program of soil erosion control which includes terracing, farming with contour rows, permanent pastures on marginal land, reforestation on submarginal lands and steep slopes, gully control, strip-cropping and crop rotation.

Actual location of the camp was made Monday by Major C. E. Bayles, Captain H. B. Brucke and E. M. Gatlin of the United States Soil Erosion Service.

Construction in 10 Days

Construction work will start within the next 10 days. Mr. Stanley said he was unable to announce Thursday the number of acres on which the camp would be maintained.

The site of the camp is only a few hundred yards off the Lewisville highway.

Mr. Stanley said that he understood the camp would be operated for a period of five years, subject at all times to legislative enactment by the congress.

Announcement of four other camps over the state was made. They include Columbia, Drew, Hot Spring and Cleburne counties.

Local Excursion April 25

As an important preliminary to obtaining the CCC camp for Hempstead county Mr. Stanley led a motortruck of eight cars from Hope to Conway Thursday, April 25, inspecting federal soil erosion control projects in Faulkner county and interviewing the regional executive of the Soil Erosion Service at the Conway office.

The motortruck comprised representative Hempstead county farmers, with the cars furnished by local business men and farmers.

The party left Hope at 5 o'clock in the morning, drove into Conway at 8:30, spent the day ranging over 60 miles of rough dirt roads in northern Faulkner county—and returned home that night.

In the motortruck April 25 were the following:

Plenty of Right Food Will Add Weight.

Some of my readers have written, pointing out that I have been discussing proper diets and suitable control for persons who are overweight, but that I have said very little to aid those who are underweight. Well, here's the advice they are seeking. If you are underweight, you should know that this involves consideration not only of the food that you eat, but also your daily habits. Failure to gain weight may be due to overactivity, or to excessive smoking, to nervous exhaustion or lack of sleep.

If you take in enough food with a sufficient amount of calories, and if this food is properly used in your body, you should surely gain weight. Sometimes the tissues of the body burn up the material too rapidly, in such event you should have a basal metabolism test to determine the rate of your body chemistry, and if the test turns out to be a high plus—that is to say, 12 to 15 or over—your physician will advise the necessary measures for restoring your body chemistry to a suitable rate.

Sometimes it is impossible to get people who are underweight to take suitable amounts of rest and relaxation without putting them in a hospital or a sanitarium where they are completely under control.

There are, of course, certain foods which are more useful in adding weight than others, because they provide large amounts of so-called food value without a great amount of bulk. Milk, cream, butter, bacon, breads, and vegetables are some foods which provide large numbers of calories, and peas, lima beans, rice, macaroni, and spaghetti are considered to be exceptionally useful in diets for gaining weight.

The diets may also be enriched by such substances as malted milks, dried milks, and olive oil. You may have to eat something not only at the usual hours for the three meals daily, but also at periods between meals, as at 10:30 in the morning, 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and again just before going to bed.

Above all, you should see that your appetite is sustained and that you do not avoid food because of lack of appetite. While overactivity should be avoided, a certain amount of exercise in the open air is desirable as a means of increasing the appetite. The milder types of exercise, such as walking and golfing, are preferable.

Another factor that may be useful in building up weight because of improvement of appetite is a temporary visit to a vacation resort, where you will be away from business and domestic worries and where the whole atmosphere is conducive to a healthy type of living.

Napoleon Had Role of Good Hubby, Too—Letters to His Wife Shed New Light on Emperor

The Emperor Napoleon seems to have been one of those industrious husbands who believe that the little woman needs plenty of loving care, but does not need to know very much about her husband's business affairs.

This quaint thought arises from a reading of "Napoleon's Letters to Marie Louise," and if it seems unduly flippant to treat an important historical discovery so lightly, I can only say that history is worth reading chiefly because it enables us to recognize the great men of the past to recognizable flesh-and-blood dimensions. We have here, apparently, almost all the letters which Napoleon wrote to the Hapsburg princess during their brief, tragic association. He married her, of course, for reasons of state, to found a dynasty; he had not seen her before their wedding day, and less than a month before she became engaged to him she was writing a friend that she felt extremely sorry for the princess who would be obliged to become his wife.

Nevertheless, they seem to have got on well enough. Napoleon's letters are such as any dutiful husband might write. Toward the end, Napoleon seems to have tried to get Marie Louise to plant pro-French leanings in the breast of her father, the emperor of Austria. This plan, of course, failed; Marie failed at statecraft as she did at wifely constancy—she took a lover when Napoleon went to St. Helena. Publisher by Farrar and Rinehart, the book sells for 3.

YOUR CHILDREN

By Olive Roberts Barton

Moving Often Upsets Child's Security

A little boy has just moved to a new town. His mother, knowing how devoted he was to playmates and the old scene, thought it best to prepare him. She drew bright pictures of the new home-to-be, some distance away. He fell in with the spirit of the thing and excitedly watched the packing. He was permitted to put his train and toys in certain boxes for the ride. The big truck at the door, strange men tramping through the fast-emptying rooms, and the neighborhood children standing around, made in an exciting day.

At last the van drove away. He was jacketed and bundled and bundled into the family car. His small friends were waving. For the first time he realized the finality of moving. He became very quiet.

He Behaves Badly
The next two days he spent with the family at a relative's home. Everyone conspired to make him happy. His mother drew even brighter pictures of "the other city" and "the new house," and the long ride he would have on the way.

At first he was contrary. He was restless when awake and still more restless asleep. He refused to eat, and that worried her still more. She decided that he was confused about the whole affair. What could she do to explain that he would have another home very much like his last?

"Home"—that was it, the idea flashed. By the second night he had developed a slight temperature, so she sat on his bed and told him to hurry up and get better because they were going HOME.

Transformation
An amazing change took place. She told me that if ever there was relief and ecstasy in a child's eyes, she saw it then. Next morning he was up bright and eager for travel. The start was auspicious, then he seemed to sense the distance he was putting between himself and the old scene. He was both naughty and ill, a clear case of "apprehension" on his part.

Then finally they arrived at the new house. There was the well-remembered furniture, all in place. There were his toys and tricycle and trains. Best of all, there was his daddy, too. The family reunited, secure, together.

Almost at once he was his own normal bright self. The fear was gone. The flushed tight look had disappeared. A perfectly contented little boy once more.

Which goes to prove, in this one case at least, that a child's behavior reflects home conditions. When his feeling of security is threatened he cannot possibly be at his best—something for parents to think of before lightly going separate ways.

The Darkness of Sorrow—and of Uncertainty

Summer Sweethearts

By Mabel McElliot © 1935, NEA Service, Inc.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

KATHARINE STRYKHURST, beautiful 20, is discontented with the useless round of social activities that make up her life. Her father and aristocratic stepmother, BERTINE, refuse to let Katharine undertake any sort of work. Katharine rides daily with MICHAEL HEATHCOTE, young westerner who runs a riding club. SALLY MOON, local coquette, also enrolls at the club for riding lessons.

ZOE PARKER, Katharine's friend, returns from Europe where she was sent to forget a love affair with GIBBS LARKIN, of whom her parents disapprove. Zoe is still in love with Gibbs.

DR. JOHN KAYE, a relative of Bertine's, says the Strykhursts a visit.

Katharine telephones the riding club, learns Michael is riding with Sally and feels a pang of jealousy.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER VII

ZOE spoke cautiously into the mouthpiece: "Telegram," she said. "Straight telegram to Mr. Gibbs Larkin, Pequot House, White Bay, Maine: Come back. Must see you. Awfully important. All my love. Signed Zoe."

She sighed with relief. No one had heard her. The maids were downstairs, busy with luncheon preparations. Her mother, in crisp linen and a shady hat, had driven her half an hour ago to a Garden Club meeting.

"It's uncanny," Zoe murmured to herself. The soft summer morning was breathlessly warm, still; haze brooded over everything.

She ran downstairs, ran out upon the lawn, her white shoes becoming streaked and stained with the heavy dew. If Gibbs should wire back, if Mother should get the wire—oh, she would be in a situation then, right enough! Her heart was beating fast, beating thickly. She couldn't stand this much longer! She had been giddy with shock last night when someone—that Hart boy, she remembered—had said Gibbs was going to marry some girl from Swampscott. It wasn't, it couldn't be true! People started stories like that, heaven only knew why. But she had to see him—had to find out what it was all about.

She had letters to write, a new book with the leaves still uncut. But she couldn't settle down to anything. She listened, tense as a violin string, for the sound of the telephone, for Gerda's voice calling her.

She needed a shampoo and manicure, but she dare not leave to go down to the village. Her wire might come; her mother, thinking it urgent, might open it . . .

ALL day she waited, strung on thin wires of waiting. Lunch was served. She toyed with food, her ears strained for the scrape of a messenger boy's wheels on the gravel.

"You're not hungry, dear."

"Not very. Had a late breakfast."

Gerda came round with the soufflé.

"You must try some of this. It's delicious. Cook will be hurt."

Zoe helped herself to it indifferently. Maybe she was going to be really ill. Her cheeks burned, as if with a fever, and her hands were like ice. Gibbs!

"Katharine looked lovely last night, didn't she?"

"Listen, Kay," said Zoe, "I'm nearly frantic. I wired Gibbs today—"

"What did you say, Mother? Oh, yes, she was grand in that white thing. Sort of goddess-like."

"Noel Cotline thought so. He said she reminded him of the old pictures of Lady Diana Manners."

"I must tell Kay that," Zoe said, trying to rouse herself to some interest. Her mother would be sure to notice, if she didn't.

"Did you notice Gerda last night?"

Zoe tried to smile intelligently. (Was that the library telephone? You could hardly hear it in here; it's trill was so faint.)

"Not particularly. Why?"

"She made a dead set for Dr. Kaye," observed Lisa Parker, with relish. "Captain Byrne is going back to Port Hill next week. I suppose Gerda is planning for the future."

"Kitty, klty, klty!"

"Why, Zoe, I'm not being in the least catty about Gerda. Everybody knows she's the world's worst flirt. She'll marry Captain Byrne, all right, but she must be amused in the meantime."

Words, words, words, thought Zoe wearily. As if she cared what Gerda Melvaine thought or did. But she had to pretend interest, smile, eat mouthfuls of the rich dessert.

At last lunch was over and she was allowed to escape.

Zoe went out on the terrace, well within the range of the library telephone and the driveway, up which any errand boy might tool his bicycle. She fixed her eye on the printed page, but her mind was elsewhere. One-thirty now, and the wire must have been delivered about 11. Well, but Gibbs might be out for a day's sailing, fishing—anything. It was absurd to expect an instant reply.

THE long day dragged past. Edith Williams came in for tea; Zoe mothers' meetings and needlework and ordering food, raising dogs and playing golf and sitting at stuffy desks in stuffy offices. . . . They didn't know what it was like to be really alive, or, if they did, they had long since forgotten it.

To suffer, as she was now suffering, thinking of Gibbs, with his hard, handsome face, too lined, too knowing, staring down intently at some smug, horrid little girl who went to the Vincent Club dances and lived on Beacon Hill and went to Swampscott in the summertime—oh, it was unbearable.

Twilight deepened; the candle flames burned stagnant and steady in the dimness. There was no breeze anywhere. The foghorn began again—a monotonous, eerie note.

"I declare, that gets on my nerves," Lisa Parker said, placidly, after an interval.

ZOE pushed back her chair. "I hate it," she said explosively. "I can't stand it a single other minute."

Her mother stared after her reflectively.

"She's been moping all day," she said. "I don't know what's wrong. She seemed so gay—so glad to be home . . . at first."

"You pay entirely too much attention to her," Henry Parker said, deliberately cutting the end from a long cigar.

Zoe ran through the hall, scarcely conscious of where she was going.

Gerda intercepted her. "There's a call for you, miss. On the upstairs phone."

Her heart seemed to stop beating for an instant. She flashed a smile at the girl. Gerda was clever. She knew there was something in the wind . . .

Zoe ran like a wild thing up the broad staircase.

"Hello, Hello." Her hands were shaking.

But it was Katharine's familiar, laughing voice that answered her. Zoe felt utterly sick, shaken, with disappointment.

"Ellen said you called before."

"Oh, I did. Look, Kay, can you run over for a minute? I have you guests."

"Bertine has, but I can get away. Down at the end of the garden? In five minutes . . ."

Zoe powdered her nose, thinking in a detached way that she looked ghastly. Katharine was the lucky one, not to have involved herself in any way in a love affair. "I wish I could be like her. She's so cool and detached," Zoe thought.

Katharine's pale green organdie glistened behind the trellis. She skirted the convent garden to come in this way. A painted gate and a rustic seat broke the line of the hedge, and below the rough line of rocky beach showed.

"What's up?"

"Listen, Kay, I'm nearly frantic. I wired Gibbs today . . ."

"I don't believe he's going to marry anyone," Katharine said flatly.

"But if he is! What shall I do?"

She was so obviously miserable. Strain showed in her round face, pale now in the gathering dark, and in the shadows under her eyes.

"It's not worth it," Katharine began. But she was interrupted.

Both girls drew instinctively together as a dark figure sprang at them out of the fog, from the direction of the beach.

"Oh, he isn't eh?" demanded a masculine voice.

"Gibbs!" cried Zoe, on a note of terror and delight.

GLORIFYING YOURSELF

Cosmetics Follow the Season

New manners in makeup are as light and gay as spring breezes. Just as you have changed your wardrobe to suit the season, so should you change your cosmetics.

For instance, unless your skin is particularly dry, you don't need as heavy a tissue cream during the summer months. If it is oily, you may find it more satisfactory to clean face and neck with soap and water instead of cleansing cream. Naturally, since your pores tend to throw off even more oil when the weather is hot, you'll want to do everything you can to check them. A mild astringent instead of a plain tonic may help. Use it several times a day—certainly always after you have applied cream. Everyone ought to have a foundation cream or lotion that really keeps powder on her face. However, even though you get by without one in winter, don't try it during the summer months. You simply must have a base to which you can press your clinging. Try a few to see which is best for your type of complexion.

Hand lotions are just as important in July as they are in December. You'll discover that golf and all of your other outdoor activities can make your hands as rough and hard as did the icy blasts of winter. Smooth on the lotion several times a day and, if you are an inveterate gardener or if you drive a car a good deal, better cream your hands one night a week and sleep in clean cotton gloves. Changes in makeup should come gradually. As your skin becomes more tanned, you'll need darker face powder and rouge that has subtle orange lights in it. Keep an eye on the cosmetic counter of your favorite store and stock up on midsummer preparations whenever there is a sale.

NEXT: New cosmetic kits.

I am in love with loveliness of fragile things:
Fragrance of frostings on November leaves,

It leaves a potpourri of rose leaves in the heart.—Selected.

its social meeting on Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Fred R. Harrison on South Pine street. The cold dreary weather on the outside was indeed quite a contrast to the charm and cheeriness of the inside of this beautiful home, with its added beauty of lovely flowers forming an appropriate setting and atmosphere for the "Intellectuals" who came all set for a good time. A short business session was conducted by the outgoing president, Mrs. Steve Carrigan, who after the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting by Mrs. W. P. Agee, gave a short talk thanking the club members for their cooperation during her administration and introduced Mrs. E. E. White, the new president who named her program committee for next year's work. Closing the business period, Mrs. Carrigan turned the meeting to Mrs. Hugh Smith and Mrs. Gus Haynes, who had prepared a number of mental (?) tests toward the afternoon's entertainment, and the large number who were seated on the first round, must have given the new program committee plenty of thought as to our placement for next year's study. The next stunt called for some physical activity, and again our courage rose, but the next test proved another "knock out" and so on through the entire program, and most of us were weary, when we came to meet the last test, which again put us on our pedestals, and after awarding the prize to Mrs. R. M. Bryant in a guessing contest, the hostess invited the guests into the dining room where from a lace covered table centered with a basket of lovely gladioli with Mrs. Bryant pouring, Mrs. Harrison assisted by Mrs. R. M. LaGrone served a most tempting colorful sandwich course with cookies and mints, in which the pleasing color note of pink and green was most beautifully emphasized, thus ending a year of most interesting study and pleasant association. The next meeting will be held on the first Wednesday in October.

Miss Louise Price is spending some time visiting with relatives and friends in Kentucky and Tennessee points.

The Junior-Senior High P. T. A. will meet at 8 o'clock, Thursday evening, at the high school. Following the program, a reception for the high school teachers will be held in the Home Ec. Cottage. All mothers and fathers are urged to be present at this, last meeting of the school year. For transportation call 82.

WHAT CCC HAS ACHIEVED IN TWO YEARS

Some of the tangible results which the Civilian Conservation Corps has achieved during its two years of existence are shown in the above sketch map, based on official data reported by Director Robert Fechner. This gives a hint as to why doubling of the scope of the CCC was the first move in the $1,850,000,000 work-relief drive now getting under way.

WASHINGTON—(NEA)—First fruits of the $1,850,000,000 work-relief drive for the coming year are already seen as enrollment begins to bring some 300,000 new volunteers into the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Usually it is actually hard for the government to spend money quickly in vast sums, especially if any regard is had for economy and money's worth. Ask Secretary Ickes, who even yet hasn't been able to spend all that Public Works fund of $3,300,000,000.

But when expansion of the CCC amounts to doubling its work and facilities was decided on, the plans were ready. Director Robert Fechner had anticipated the action, for the CCC is acknowledged to be one of the more successful of New Deal experiments.

Within a few weeks of passage of the work-relief bill, CCC expansion is already under way. Enrollment will be doubled to reach more than 600,000, and the number of camps will be increased from 1840 to about 2900.

Fechner believes the CCC will eventually be regarded as a permanent government institution. The increasing difficulty of fitting young men into industry, and of continuing their schooling until industrial jobs are ready for them, makes it look as though the CCC will be an increasingly important bridge of that morale-breaking gap.

But the beauty of the CCC, Fechner maintains, is that it produces definite, tangible public improvements, the value of which can be seen and measured.

Fechner estimates, for instance, that the money value of works constructed by the CCC during the first two years of its existence is around $335,000,000, about half the cost of the corps to date.

And indirect benefits in the preservation and improvement of natural resources mount into unfathomable hundreds of millions more.

That, Fechner maintains, is not a bad return on a scheme that has furnished health-building outdoor work to more than a million young men who might otherwise have spent their time on street corners.

And the pay sent home by that million young men helped some 3,000,000 of their dependents over a tough time.

Fort Service experts have for months been planning work to be undertaken during the coming summer and fall. Starved for funds and facilities for many years, this conservation corps is overjoyed at the prospect of $600,000,000 and 600,000 workmen for this year.

The long-neglected conservation program, dream of plan-minded administrations since Theodore Roosevelt's time, has been advanced 20 years by the CCC, they estimate.

With such a record of accomplishment piling up behind it since the first 200 CCC men went to camp at Luray, Va., April 7, 1933, conservation-minded officials have high hopes for the future of CCC.

George Earnshaw Sold to Brooklyn

Chicago, Like Athletics, Drops Aging Rebel Pitching Star

CHICAGO—George Earnshaw will leave no more fast balls and curves for the Chicago White Sox. He was sold Wednesday to the Brooklyn Dodgers on a straight cash basis.

That means he was waved on by the other American League clubs, indicating that in the junior circuit at least, there is little confidence in the fellow's ability at 36 years of age to come back. He will report to the Dodgers in Pittsburgh at once.

Secretary Harry Grabner of the White Sox declared the sale was in line with the club's policy of developing a young team.

Earnshaw came to the White Sox two years ago at a reported purchase price of $20,000 and catcher Charlie Berry as just another of the discards from Connie Mack's championship Athletics. He won 14 games for the tail-end Sox last season.

This spring, he had shown little inclination toward trying to get into top shape. He complained about the lack of warm weather to bring him into form. In addition, he was inclined to underestimate the chances of his team.

A rift developed recently when Earnshaw overrode the judgment of both Dykes and Catcher Luke Sewell in pitching to Oscar Melillo of the Browns with men on second and third in Earnshaw's first start this spring.

Earnshaw grooved a fast ball to Melillo, who is known as a fast ball hitter, and Oscar singled to center, driving in the tying runs. Two other hits followed and the ball game was lost.

Earnshaw came to the White Sox after Connie Mack had declared "George will never pitch another game for me." Late in the 1933 season George was suspended and even ordered to take all his baseball equipment from his locker at Shibe park. The suspension Mack announced was "for the best interests of the club."

If, however, you follow Dr. Payne's twenty rules when choosing a marriage partner, you will be less likely to run up against snags, he asserts. Here they are:

1. If you are the quiet type who likes to stay home evenings and study. Don't marry the type who likes noise and talk and is unhappy if left alone for a single minute.
2. A man should pick a womanly woman and a woman should choose the manly man.
3. A woman should always marry a man who is more intelligent and stronger than she is.
4. It often is much better for the man to be older than the woman, even eight, ten or twelve years older.
5. Study carefully the type of man or woman that attracts or repulses you. Each person has what the psychology calls the "marriage-partner pattern." Some men favor only blonds, some brunettes, some like one shape of face, some another. This is "the unconscious seeking for the one man who will complete the incomplete man in every woman and one woman who more such extreme critics as the U. S. Chamber of Commerce has been welcomed by Roosevelt lately.

Calls Cutting Martyr

The late Senator Bronson Cutting probably will be held up as a martyr in the 1936 presidential campaign if a third radical party ticket enters the field.

His friend, Congressman Thomas R. Amie, Wisconsin Progressive, in his weekly letter to hundreds of liberals, refers to "the persecution of Senator Cutting by President Roosevelt," and declares: "The death of Senator Cutting and the circumstances which led up to it have marked also the death of the last hope of many liberals in the president and his New Deal.

Amie is a leader in the house insurgent or "unruly" group and a quiet but persistent worker for a new political realignment.

Lays Blame on Roosevelt

He changes that Roosevelt himself took the initiative in a political alliance of conservative Republicans and Democrats to defeat the progressive Cutting in the last election; that Roosevelt's fight against Cutting continued in the Chavez election contest, although "even Jim Farley tried to persuade the president to abandon this persecution"; that Cutting was forced to make many trips to New Mexico to defend himself against groundless charges; and that in returning from one such trip he met his death.

"Handout" Is the Bunk

About half the people you meet these days ask you who wrote a book called "Handout," which purports to expose an alleged great administration plot to suppress vital facts and to control the channels of news.

Reason for the curiosity is the fact that the book is largely an incredible collection of misstatements and distortions. Various newspaper correspondents and others are being accused of irresponsible gossip and the charge is such an insult that there may be a few fist fights before Washington forgets the book.

changed his mind, saying he wanted more time to consider. Officers indicated they would take McKean to the Oklahoma state penitentiary at McAlester.

McKean finally decided to stand by his plea of not guilty and his arraignment was scheduled for May 22 before Judge George R. Childers in District Court here. Officers said McKean requested an interview with County Attorney C. D. Wilkerson tomorrow regarding robbery of the Federal National bank in 1932.

McKean gave his name to officers here as Rufus McKean and is held under that name.

McKean was serving a 12-year sentence in Arkansas for robbery of a bank at Dierks. He also was accused of taking part in the $10,000 robbery of the local bank in 1932. Two others charged with that robbery were slain resisting arrest.

Revises Share-the-Wealth Plan—But Secretary Tugwell Is Gloomy

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Senator Long, Democrat, Louisiana, made a new thrust at Postmaster General Farley Wednesday and simultaneously elaborated to the senate a revised "share-the-wealth" program.

Undismayed by Tuesday's 62-to-38 senate refusal to investigate Farley's official conduct, Long demanded in a new resolution an inquiry into all government building and construction contracts and "acts of officers of the United States" relating to them.

The new "share the wealth" plan more drastic than proposals first advanced in the senate by the Louisianaian, had three points:

Guarantee that no man may possess more than 100 to 200 times the average family wealth. He estimated this would limit fortunes to from $1,500,000, to $3,000,000.

A guaranteed homestead to every family of not less than one-third the average family wealth. Long estimated this would provide a homestead of from $5,000 to $8,000 for every family and provide them with "the things necessary for respectable comfort."

Provide that the income of every family shall not be less than one-third the average family income for a given year, nor more than 100 times the average. He estimated this would provide a minimum of $2,000.

Few senators heard Long outline his program. The Louisiana senator contended it would bring an era of prosperity never before imagined, which there would be "no drouths, no floods, no desert."

But Tugwell Says—ALBANY, N. Y.—(AP)—Rexford G. Tugwell drew an imaginary picture of the year 2235 A. D. Wednesday night in which he saw the Mississippi river drying up and the Midwest desolated by dust storms unless the federal conservation program is carried forward.

Unless trees, grass and water supplies are conserved, the undersecretary of agriculture predicted that St. Louis and other cities in 200 years would be "skeletons of twisted steel."

Tugwell was the principal speaker at a dinner on the 50th anniversary of conservation work in New York state. He explained the purposes of the resettlement administration, the federal government's newly-created agent to better farm management by co-ordinating and enlarging the work of agricultural colleges and administrative agencies having direct contact with farmers.

Three Classifications Present plans called for three classifications of workers, with gradations in pay. Separate wage schedules would be provided for the six major regions into which the country has been divided.

It was said the new wage scales, which are to apply to all relief jobless with the exception of the Civilian Conservation Corps, will be modified to fit conditions in 320 work areas already marked out by Hopkins. A survey of the cost of living for low income families in 59 representative cities was to be completed shortly.

Present public works regulations provide minimum wage rates for two classes of labor—skilled and unskilled in the Northern, Central and Southern zones—but require payment of prevailing union wages if the latter are higher.

The new works schedule would set up an intermediate class of semi-skilled workers, with pay approximately midway between the skilled and unskilled.

85 cents for skilled. These were described as falling 30 per cent below PWA averages based on prevailing rates.

Most of the 750,000 white-collar people now on relief were said to fall in the skilled and semi-skilled classes. These were to receive research or administrative work.

County Judge Weaver Calls Mass Meeting in Prescott Thursday

PRESCOTT, Ark.—County Judge E. H. Weaver called a meeting of some 40 representative business men and farmers over the county Thursday morning at 10 o'clock for the purpose of devising some plan to finance the county agents so that their work may be continued in this county.

Judge Weaver issued a notice the first of this month that the county would no longer be able to help finance the county agent's work and since that time he has been busy trying to formulate some plan for financing the work. To date no plan has been decided upon. Judge Weaver stated that by calling these men together some means to raise money might be devised.

The work of closing out the county agent's offices here has already been started and it is understood that unless some means is devised to finance the work the offices and records will be closed here and moved to some other county.

grand jury's refusal to indict three Denver business men.

The government contended that 1,000 "send-a-buck" letters the three men had mailed, violated the fraud and lottery statutes but the grand jury returned a "no true bill."

Thomas J. Morrissey, federal district attorney and Postoffice Inspector Roy Nelson, who had warned chain letter fans of drastic action unless the game was halted, would not say whether they will make another effort to test the legality of the scheme.

The three Denver men, R. M. Barnholt, H. L. Harris and Edward W. Hughes, contended the chain they started was similar to the original "send-a-buck" scheme and that there was no reason why the government should single them out for action.

Nelson alleged that the three men placed their names or the names of relatives on 1,000 letters, that if carried through, the chain unbroken would have netted approximately $18,000,000.

The postoffice inspector closed several chain letter "factories" here last week on threats of prosecution. Dozens of the "factories" spring up in all parts of the city and crowds that had the appearance of mobs at times besieged the places. Since then most of the chain letter business here has been conducted by messenger, express or telegraph service. Everything from fish poles to automobiles is being sold through the chain letter medium.

Illinois Rejects Relief Fund Bill

State's Needy to Face Actual Hunger for Balance of Month

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—(AP)—The Illinois relief crisis moved closer to what officials called "the danger line" Wednesday night as the house failed for the fourth time to adopt legislation designed to end the deadlock.

While more than 2,000 jobless persons protested the relief breakdown in a mass demonstration at Chicago and crowds jammed the house galleries here, a roll call on the key measure was suspended when it became apparent the 102 votes necessary for emergency passage had not been mustered.

The unofficial count stood at 90 to 50 in favor of the bill to increase the sales tax from 2 to 3 per cent and thus provide $3,000,000 a month as the state's share of relief costs.

The Illinois Emergency Relief Commission ceased operations Saturday after it had been cut off the federal allotment lists May 1 because the state had made no provision for raising its relief contribution. Over most of the state the needy will have no more food after this week.

In Chicago's Grant park, more than 2,000 persons waved banners demanding restoration of relief and listened to their orators condemn city, state and federal officials. Almost 1,000 foot and mounted policemen kept them under surveillance. Later a delegation of six took their complaints to the city hall.

The assembly chanted Communist songs, flung Red flags and then disbanded on their leaders' advice to "go home and organize for further demonstrations."

Assert U. S. Paid for Farm March

AAA Heads Indignantly Deny Charge by Republican Senator

WASHINGTON—(AP)—A bitter senate clash Wednesday over sources of funds for the mass farmer demonstration praising the AAA brought an assertion from Secretary Wallace that he would "welcome an investigation of the farmers' trip to Washington."

Senator Hastings, Delaware Republican, demanded the information on where the money comes from in a senate resolution after expressing resentment at President Roosevelt's denunciation of the "high and mighty" who were "lying" about his agricultural adjustment program.

Hastings said that President Roosevelt's characterization of critics of the AAA as "liars" reminded him "of the small town bully, who boldly and courageously calls his opponents foul names when he has his own crowd with him to protect him."

He contrasted the president's attitude toward AAA critics with the ex-which he urged his audience to "feel executive's radio address April 28 in free to criticize."

"The president invites criticism," Hastings said, "and then shows that he 'can't take it' were earlier called 'liars,' 'traitors,' 'whiners,' 'chiselers,' etc., but now we are called 'liars,' and everybody understands just what that means, and it comes with little dignity from a man who holds the high position of president of the United States."

"But I want to say that if this term is to be applied to all those persons who have criticized the 'New Deal' we have developed the greatest crop of 'liars' within the last six months ever found in any country."

Hastings said the 4,000 farmers before whom president spoke were "farm lobbyists whose expenses are being paid, directly or indirectly, by the federal government." His resolution would have Wallace supply all correspondence about the meeting of farmers and a report on whether the government furnished transportation costs.

"This is a direct reflection on the farmers," he shouted. Connally, Democrat, Texas, and Hastings retorted by denying it was a "reflection on these people who have been getting money from the administration for doing nothing."

Connally said the resolution implied an "embezzlement of the funds of the United States" by Wallace with the farmers as a party to the conspiracy. He urged an immediate vote on the resolution so "detectives can get out their searchlights and see if the farmers have left anything."

Hastings said his haste to vote was "of course, an effort to kill" his resolution. McNary of Oregon, Republican leader, objected to an immediate ballot.

Wallace made his remark at a press conference, saying he knew of no communication between his department and AAA officials with farmers concerning the farm assemblage. Chester C. Davis, AAA administrator, said that field agents had been warned not to participate in plans for the march.

would not be raised in event of hostilities, Simon said. "I have no reason to suppose that the Italian government is not perfectly aware of the obligations of this country."

He would not be drawn out further but it was learned that Sir John referred to Britain's "obligations" under the League to assist any League member (including Ethiopia) which is a victim of aggression. It was denied he referred to any obligation under an international agreement signed in 1888 which proclaimed the Suez canal open at all times to vessels of war, regardless of the flag they carried.

Ethiopia Seizure

which most often is chosen to echo government plans, said that Ethiopia's "incapacity to comprehend and assimilate the elementary values of civilization" makes it necessary that "there be given Ethiopian territory an organization which will deprive it of the possibility of menacing any more neighboring colonies, above all Italian interests which have been attacked."

These blasts followed the bold declaration by Benito Mussolini that other nations must keep their hands off the Italo-Ethiopian dispute.

"Italian Necessities"

That it is to be Italy which impose this "organization" upon Ethiopia was recognized by the Giornale d'Italia when it said, "To regulate the European value of Italy as a civilized nation and power for equilibrium, signifies to recognize also these Italian necessities in East Africa, her rights of defense and of guarantees."

It is not to be doubted the newspaper concluded, that "England, so abundantly furnished with rich colonial territories and precious mandates will recognize the just basis of these Italian positions."

Italian newspapers in dispatches from Paris and London said Mussolini's speech Tuesday had a definite effect of reorientating opinions of those two governments.

It Duce told the senate that every war industry here has been working at full time for several months and that approximately 900,000 men of "superb morale" are under arms.

Not to Close Canal
LONDON, Eng.—(AP)—Great Britain will make no move to close the Suez canal and British ports to Italian warships and transports without first consulting the League of Nations and the United States, a high authority said Wednesday night.

Agitation for such a single-handed action by Britain is increasing among Liberal and Labor political circles as a result of Benito Mussolini's inference that he will ignore a tripartite treaty by which he is pledged to consult England and France in regard to Ethiopian disputes.
